

The members did it – good employment terms for everyone

Did you know that organized Industrial Union employees achieved a generally binding collective agreement for the technology industry agreement sector?

The collective agreement was reached because we were active, and we operated together.

We showed employers that we want to keep an agreement-based approach, have good labour relations, and have employment terms based on a collective agreement. We can be proud because the situation is historic, and it wasn't obvious that our employment terms would be agreed at the negotiating table.

A collective agreement is security for members

For a long time, employers have aimed to fundamentally change the agreement model. Unfortunately, this usually means employment terms are dictated unilaterally.

The collective agreement reached is generally binding and means our employment terms will continue to be developed and monitored together with the shared strength of union members. We are the union!

Join us!

Organizing means being able to interact with our employer on equal terms. The more of us there are, the stronger we are.

Now is the time to join the team so we can continue to get you better employment terms!

Are you in favour of fair employment terms?
